I am giving you copies of my transcriptions of the thirteen interviews conducted to date by Professor Emeritus Oliver Schroeder as part of an oral history of the law school. A fourteenth transcription is of my own interview with Mary Bohurjak; I also give you the cassette tape.

I am also giving you a disk containing the transcriptions, all in WordStar 3.

Finally, I give you some pages that Professor Schroeder turned over to me: his notes on the David Ford interview, photocopied material about Henry DuLaurence Sr., a memorandum and biography from Lisle Buckingham, and a photocopy of a little article that Mr. Buckingham read into the tape recorder.

A separate sheet catalogs the interviews.

A word about my transcriptions. They are perhaps 99 percent accurate. I did not capture every false start of a sentence, for example, or every comment interjected by the interviewer. And I have not attempted to verify the proper names; sometimes (but not always) an uncertainty is indicated by a question mark. Anything in square brackets is an insertion by me.

A peculiarity of my word processor is that when I make a dash with two hyphens--like this--and it happens to fall at the end of the line, the two hyphens don't necessarily stay together. You--get something that looks like that when it's printed. I did not attempt to correct the problem when I printed the transcriptions because I didn't want to introduce extra spaces or returns.

By agreement with Dennis Harrison, I'm also giving copies to the university archives.
