EDITOR'S NOTE

Following in our predecessors' footsteps, this has been a very good year for the Journal. In particular, this Symposium issue represents the sum of a tremendous amount of hard work and dedication by our staff of editors and associates, without whom none of this would have been possible. I wish my friends and colleagues on the Journal the very best of luck, knowing that a bright future is reflected in the fine work they have done here.

The pieces in this Symposium show us that there are numerous effective and reasonable paths to peace in the Middle East, and that no problem as historically, philosophically, and legally complex as the Palestinian-Israeli debate is likely to have a simple solution. The authors of these pieces have shown us that an objective as evasive as "peace" requires courage, patience, and, above all, a special blend of pragmatism and hope.

On behalf of the Journal, I thank everyone involved for making this Symposium a success.
