This Front Matter is brought to you for free and open access by the Student Journals at Case Western Reserve University School of Law Scholarly Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Case Western Reserve Law Review by an authorized administrator of Case Western Reserve University School of Law Scholarly Commons.

THE PUBLICATION of the first issue of the WESTERN RESERVE LAW REVIEW represents the realization of a hope entertained for many years by students, faculty, and alumni, and fostered during the last few years by successive case notes boards.

Experience in other law schools has demonstrated that the faculty adviser of such a publication must devote a large amount of time to it and, with a small faculty, each man's time is fully occupied with other essential duties. Thus, until this year, it was not deemed feasible for us to attempt publication of a review. However, with the recent substantial increase in the resident faculty, it is now possible to assign one member to the law review as adviser and another as assistant adviser.

The first editorial board is composed, for the most part, of students who served under the previous case notes board, and consequently they approach their new duties with a background of experience. The ability, industry, and enthusiasm already displayed by the board fill me with astonishment and respect, and give me complete confidence in the success of this new venture.

My congratulations and best wishes to all those who have made the law review dream come true.

FLETCHER R. ANDREWS,
Dean
