TO THE graduates of Western Reserve Law School, the year 1958 will be remembered as the year in which the DEAN retired. In view of the untiring efforts which Dean Andrews has expended on behalf of the Western Reserve Law Review, it is fitting that this issue of the Review be dedicated to the DEAN.

The writers of the lead articles appearing in this issue are representative of the vast number of prominent legal and educational figures with whom the DEAN has been associated over the years. Some of the writers were the DEAN'S students, others served on the faculty with him, but all of them have one thing in common; that is a profound respect and affection for Fletcher R. Andrews.

The DEAN'S circle of friends and associates is so extensive that a multi-volume work would be necessary to contain articles by all of them. So, the writers contributing to this issue were asked to represent the legions of prominent individuals who have come to know and respect "Fletch" and express their collective sentiments as to the DEAN.
