Dedication

FORTY-SEVEN years ago a young man was called upon, in the middle of a semester, to complete a course in Suretyship at the Western Reserve School of Law. In the two score and seven years which followed, this same young man continued his association with the Law School faculty and in addition attained renown as a brilliant trial lawyer and as an eminent author. In an academic career extending nearly three generations he transferred to his students the excitement and spirit of the law he had learned to love. His warmth and affection has permeated through all who have known him.

This year, still vigorous and young at heart, Professor Clinton DeWitt retires. It is therefore with humility that we dedicate this issue of the Review to Clinton DeWitt, a man who has dedicated a lifetime of energies and talents to his profession and most of all to his students.
