EDITORS' PREFACE

This issue of the Review presents a symposium of articles which are directed to current problems in the area of criminal law and procedure. The authors who have contributed to this issue have achieved prominence in scholarly and professional circles. They bring insight to current problems which are of pressing interest to lawyers and laymen concerned with the advancement of personal freedoms.

The staff of the Review thanks its contributors for preparing the articles and for their cooperation while these articles were being processed for publication. The staff is especially grateful to Jack G. Day for providing the impetus for this symposium and for his efforts in establishing a liaison between the contributors and the Editors of the Review.
