Comparing the Southern Border to the Northern Border and the Issues to Be Dealt with at Each - Introduction

T. Bradbrooke Smith

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarlycommons.law.case.edu/cuslj

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarlycommons.law.case.edu/cuslj/vol29/iss1/52

This Speech is brought to you for free and open access by the Student Journals at Case Western Reserve University School of Law Scholarly Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Canada-United States Law Journal by an authorized administrator of Case Western Reserve University School of Law Scholarly Commons.
I welcome you to this panel. I know that a number of you have been here throughout. I, unfortunately, could only come yesterday, but know, as usual, this has been an absolutely first rate conference. The presentations have been excellent. This is the windup. It is a little to the side in the sense that we bring in Mexico today. I know that two of our panelists have just arrived, but I can tell them that Mexico has not been on the radar screen. It will be this morning.

We have a distinguished panel. I have told the panelists that I do not propose to read the excellent short biographies, which you will find in your leaflet. They are all distinguished people. On my left is Professor Gantz from the University of Arizona, on my right Marcella Szel from the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and Mr. González Baz, who I understand has a large Mexican law firm at his back. The order that we have decided upon is that Professor Gantz will go first, then Marcella Szel, and Mr. González Baz will wind up. Without any further introduction from me, I shall ask Professor Gantz to speak to you.